Salukis snag 72-68 win from rival ISU

ST. LOUIS — Plop, plop, fizz, fizz. What a rivalry.

SIUC and Illinois State had it out for the third time this season Sunday night and everything about the showdown was the same as the first two meetings ... except the outcome.

The Salukis pulled-off a 72-68 come-from-behind victory over the Redbirds to redeem being swept by ISU during the regular season. With the victory, SIUC advances to its third straight Missouri Valley Conference tournament championship game Monday night against Tulsa at St. Louis' Kiel Center.

Round three's drama in the SIUC-Illinois State saga unfolded almost identically to game two in Normal, when ISU escaped with a 104-98 double overtime win. Redbird guard Maurice Trotter, who hit a 15-foot jumper in the closing seconds of the Feb. 18 contest to send it to overtime, got the same look at the basket Sunday with six seconds left and his team trailing 70-68.

Trotter came off a screen and was left virtually wide open, but this time his shot rimmed in-and-out.

"I was a little surprised (to be so open) and I think the team feels we got the best possible shot," Trotter said. "All I can say is I tried. The guys and the coaching staff had confidence in me. They got me the ball. I just missed the shot."

SIUC senior guard Paul Lusk hit two free throws with 5.4 seconds left to seal the victory after Trotter fouled him while going after his missed shot.

The competition phase of the festival included four categories: experimental, narrative, animation and documentary. First, second and third place winners each received cash prizes. Winning films were selected by Sarah Elder, Jean Sousa and Charles Coleman.

Elder, a documentary film maker, said the judging went well because the panel shared common movie ideals.

20,000 LEADERS TO ATTEND POVERTY SUMMIT — COPENHAGEN, Denmark—About 20,000 delegates from 180 countries converged Sunday on Copenhagen for a weeklong summit on the best ways to fight poverty. Even as delegates were arriving for the United Nations' World Summit for Social Development, however, some non-governmental anti-poverty groups argued that the summit should be canceled and the costs of staging it devoted directly to the poor. Among the participants in the summit, which opens Monday, will be an expected 116 heads of state and government, even more than the 108 national leaders who attended the United Nations' Earth Summit in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, in 1992.

CHINESE LEADER PROMISES ECONOMIC REFORM — BEIJING—Premier Li Peng told the opening session of the National People's Congress Sunday that this year the government will try to rein in economic growth, tame "excessive" inflation, overhaul money-losing state enterprises and fight corruption. Li was frank by Chinese political standards, admitting that the government had failed to curb the abuse of power by many officials and made "mistakes" that contributed to last year's 21.7 percent inflation rate. But Li, who signed the martial law order that led to the bloody 1989 crackdown on democracy demonstrators, was silent on questions of fundamental political reform.

U.S. WINS MAJORITY TO KEEP OIL EMBARGOS — UNITED NATIONS—Although the United States appears to have won a majority on the Security Council for keeping the oil embargo on Iraq, it must still devise a strategy for keeping pressure on Iraqi President Saddam Hussein to cooperate with the U.N., diplomats here cautioned Sunday. Washington's U.N. ambassador, Madeleine K. Albright, said Saturday that a tour she undertook last week gave the United States 10 votes on the 15-nation Security Council in favor of continuing U.N. economic sanctions, including the ban on petroleum exports by Iraq, France and Russia, permanent Security Council members and allies of the United States, have suggested they might seek a suspension of the oil embargo as early as April.

GOP REFORMS ON WRONG TRACK, STUDY FINDS — WASHINGTON—The reforms proposed by congressional Republicans would make it harder for insurance companies to reject applicants and refuse to renew or exclude diseases from coverage. But the study by George Washington University's Intergovernmental Health Policy Project found that the insurance-sales practices Republican reforms address are not the important impediments to the 38 million people without health insurance. The finding is consistent with Congressional Budget Office studies of insurance-reform bills proposed last year by Republicans and Democrats. CBO found that the only market-reform bills that would make a substantial difference in increasing health coverage were those that also provided billions of dollars in federal premium subsidies to help people pay for it.

SENATOR OFFERS RESIGNATION FOR AMENDMENT — WASHINGTON—Sen. Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore., who was under intense Republican pressure to switch his vote last week in order to save the balanced budget amendment, offered to resign from the Senate before the vote so the party could win it. But him, Majority Leader Robert J. Dole, R-Kan., said Sunday. Dole rejected the offer, and the amendment failed for lack of one vote — a loss so upsetting to some Republicans that they are talking about trying to strip Hatfield of his chairmanship of the powerful Appropriations Committee, sources said. In answer to questions on CBS's "Face the Nation," Dole said he was told by at least one senator that "there's a lot of frustration," especially among newer members, and that some of them will be writing him early this week to propose a course of action.

Investment options available to students wanting to save

By David R. Kazak
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The topic of investing is in the forefront of the news, after stock-exchange volume reached record levels and England's oldest banking house collapsed due to a $1 billion loss caused by a 28-year-old investment trader. And for some SIUC students, the news kindles no more than a passing interest in investments.

But according to a Carbondale banker, those students with an interest in beginning an investment portfolio need nothing more than a desire to budget what little money they do have, and the discipline to follow the program.

Information provided by Steve Melichar, an investment manager for First National Bank and Trust, shows that mutual funds may be one way students can build for the future.

Mutual funds take an investor's money and pool it with other investors in a single fund. Managers of the fund then take the pooled money and spread it across many different investments. Called diversification, this allows the money to stay relatively safe.

The amount earned depends whether the fund is considered an aggressive one or not; higher returns generated by aggressive investing generally presuppose higher risk to capital.

One type of fund shows that over the last 25 years, an initial $10,000 investment increased to over a quarter-million dollars. Other types of funds have increased to well over a half million over the same time period.

Even though $10,000 is out of reach for most students, Melichar said some long-term investment plans are relatively cheap, and may not be out of reach.

"Some mutual funds allow you to open an account with just $500," Melichar said. "After that, all the investor has to do is deposit $50 a month."

Melichar said getting started in investing is a matter of discipline.

Committee talks of theft prevention

By Rob Neff
Daily Egyptian Reporter

At its second closed meeting Friday, the new committee aimed at improving communication between students and police abandoned its agenda in favor of a brain storming session.

SIUC Student and Police Committee Spokesman Kevin Walsh, a senior in physiology from Naperville, said there was no conscious decision to abandon the agenda.

Walsh said the two topics discussed at the meeting, which lasted less than an hour, were methods students can use to prevent burglaries while they are away on spring break and the appropriate role of the University in dealing with violent crimes involving students.

"It just sort of happened," he said.

The committee, which Carbondale Police Chief Don Strom said he has been trying to form for two years, is made up of representatives from USG, the Carbondale Police Department and SIUC Security.

Strom was not available for comment on Friday's meeting, but Walsh said he brought up several things students can do to prevent burglaries while they are away.

"Use timers and work with your neighbors," he said. "Make sure your doors and windows are locked."

Chief Strom emphasized recording the serial numbers on electronics. He said sometimes police recover property they think is stolen, but they are limited unless they have the serial number.

Walsh said several members of the committee were interested in discussing the University's role in dealing with off-campus student-involved crime, even though there are no representatives from University Administration on the committee.

"There are several times violent things involving students have happened off-campus," he said. "Right now there is a separation between the University and the city. If something happens on campus it is University business. If something happens off campus, it is the city's responsibility."

Walsh said the committee did not

Funds for wildlife research at SIUC

Donation-supported fund aids projects

By Dave Katzman
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Three ongoing projects at SIUC have received financial backing from the taxpayer-supported Illinois Wildlife Preservation Fund.

Brooks M. Burr, a professor of zoology, is determining the status of the bluehead shiner. About 1,000 of the fish which used to call Illinois home were taken from hatcheries in Texas and Louisiana three years ago and reintroduced to Otter Pond in Union County.

Burr, along with zoology doctoral student Ken Cook, will assess how well the population did.

"Based on our own observations, we know they made it," Burr said. "We could find males in breeding condition or evidence of recruitment, then we'll have some at least indirect evidence that they spawned there."

Burr and Cook are waiting for ice to disappear from the pond to make the determination, which must be done before duckweed growth makes it hard to see.

George Feldhamer, an associate professor of zoology, is leading a study on populations of endangered eastern woodrats in Union County's Pine Hills, and Fountain Bluff, in Jackson County. Anne-Marie Monty, a doctoral student in zoology, and Elizabeth Wagle, a graduate student in zoology, are assisting with the project which began in July 1993.

"As far as endangered species of mammals go, the eastern woodrat has been considered one of the more endangered for about the last 20 years," Feldhamer said. "They used to be found in Shawnee National Forest in various suitable habitats throughout the forest."

Monty and Wagle catch the animals, mark them and then recapture them later to see how well the woodrats have taken to the habitat.

"We're looking at questions of population size, juvenile recruitment and survivorship and some aspects of dispersal, all oriented toward a long-term recovery program," Feldhamer said.

In addition to the project, Monty is conducting molecular genetic studies to determine the interchange between various populations of the woodrats.

"All of this relates to eventually taking animals from existing populations and getting them spread out," Feldhamer said.

Sharon Cline, who is pursuing her master's degree in plant biology, is studying how to best control woody plants in order to restore prairie plant species at Fults Hill Prairie Nature Preserve in Monroe County.

Cline is currently removing red cedar trees in the area. The trees have always been present in the area, but in the past occasional fires controlled the population. Since there has not been a fire since 1953, the red cedar has run rampant, threatening other species in the area.

"What we're trying to do is restore the historic character of the community," Cline said.

After the removal, Cline said she will sample the populations of the Chinquapin oak and two species of prairie grasses to see what effect the cedar removal had.

Cline's research is funded by the Illinois Department of Conservation Natural Heritage Division from contributions to the Illinois Wildlife Preservation Fund.

The Wildlife Preservation Fund is financed by voluntary tax-deductible donations made by Illinois taxpayers who check a box on their tax returns. Contributions are determined by an 11-member citizen-advisory board.

Hundreds have 'magical' time at gaming convention

By Dave Mack
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The card game "Magic" stole the show at the annual Egyptian Campaign '95 this weekend as 64 people cast spells and summoned fantasy creatures in an attempt to kill their opponents.

"Magic" has been one of the hottest-selling items for the last year-and-a-half, said John Bowen, who runs Fantasy and Hobby Sales in Muskegon, Mich.

"It's very easy to play," he said. "They've printed over one billion cards, which are sold all over the world."

Chris Hughes, a junior in agricultural economics from Decatur, was playing "Magic" with a friend.

Hughes said he has played "Magic" for about a year-and-a-half, and in that time he has compiled a collection of cards worth about $4,000.

Supply and demand play a big role in the worth of "Magic" cards, he added, and prices can inflate wildly.

"I just sold a card for $80 that I probably spend 15 cents on," he said.

Gamers ranged from novices to experts at this year's campaign, where desk staffers checked in a total of 468 participants for the weekend.

Increased funds key to better education

A REQUEST FROM UNIVERSITY FACULTY leaders from across the state asking Illinois politicians to approve a college budget — which was recommended by the Illinois Board of Higher Education — was partially answered with Gov. Jim Edgar's initial approval last week. While Edgar will ask the state legislature to approve the $98.1 million increase for higher education institutions, there remains a long road to the final budget approval — a road that may be littered with political opposition to the spending increase. At the minimum, state senators and representatives need to focus on the needs of state colleges and pass this recommendation.

Political gridlock should not hold back what some faculty members and IBHE agree is a budget which at least would allow higher education to maintain its current level of quality. But the state legislature should not feel restricted to pass just the IBHE budget.

WE ALL ARE IN A TIME — ESPECIALLY AT SIU — when additional funds are needed to bring higher education to new levels of quality. SIU already has sent several programs to the chopping block in order to reallocate funds from these programs to other internal areas. It is now time for Illinois politicians to audit their own spending and reallocate additional funds to higher education.

SOCIAL DEMANDS HAVE PLACED INCREASING importance on a need for individuals to obtain a college degree in order to be successful in the workplace. Society has also reached a point at which an updated increase in quality preparation is needed in academic programs to prepare prospective workers for modern problems and situations in places of employment. It is difficult for this improvement in training to take place, however, when funding for higher education has taken an overall cut in the last 25 years. A $98.1 million increase may sound significant. However, there is more to be considered.

SINCE 1970, THE AMOUNT OF THE STATE budget that is apportioned to higher education has decreased by 6.3 percent. Since then, times have changed, improvements are needed and higher education enrollment has increased by 162,833 students. The changing needs of an increasing number of college students cannot be met without an increase in funding from the state.

Using SIUC as a model, a trend of allocating fewer funds to academics is apparent. The University's current budget received a $13 million increase from the 1-st fiscal year. The IBHE proposal is asking for an increase of $6.1 million for SIUC's new budget. If approved, though it represents an increase from the current budget, it also would represent a decrease in the amount of new funds allocated to the University.

THE OLD SAYING THAT "YOU CAN'T GET something for nothing," seems to hold true when applied to the current state of higher education in Illinois. It is time for state politicians to lead by example, making cuts in wasteful areas of government spending and reallocating these funds to college programs.

Writer opposes animal dissection

The DE article "Candlelight vigil held in protest of animal testing" in the March 1 edition caught my attention. A campus group held a candlelight vigil to raise awareness of animal experiments going on at SIU's vivarium.

The article quoted Katherine Smith, director of the vivarium, as saying that animals are used only when there is no alternative. The article also says that "an animal-care committee asks researchers about their projects and makes sure a non-animal model is used if available."

The same day the article appeared, I had a lab in GEA 115 biology, in which four frogs had been dissected and their skin peeled back so a group of undergrads could look at their reproductive organs. I think it is totally unnecessary to kill frogs for this purpose, especially since there is a diagram in our lab book of frog reproductive organs.

"I say it is time to ... start showing some respect for the lives of other animals that share this planet with us."

If the biology department thinks that the diagram in the book is insufficient for class purposes, I would like to suggest obtaining plastic models which would last longer and may be less expensive than real frogs.

My position is the biology department should use Katherine Smith's idea that animals be used only when there is no alternative.

There are obvious alternatives to using real frogs in general education classes.

I am sure there are people who think cutting up a few frogs is no big deal, that high school and college biology classes across the country have been doing this for decades.

I say it is time to discontinue this archaic tradition in general education classes and start showing some respect for the lives of other animals that share this planet with us.

Federal AIDS research needs changes; back-to-basics approach has potential

Los Angeles Times

It has been 13 years since the dreaded disease that has come to be called acquired immune deficiency syndrome, or AIDS for short, was first diagnosed.

Few then would have thought that the strange malady would soon become a worldwide pandemic or have imagined the human suffering it would cause.

Despite major gains in treatment of symptoms and in public education, the AIDS virus continues to rampage, particularly in poorer nations and among minorities in this country.

And despite billions spent on research, the unhappy fact is that the stealthy virus' method of operation remains largely a medical mystery.

"A turning point has now been reached," comments Dr. William E.

Paul, director of the Office of AIDS Research at the National Institutes of Health.

"Simple continuation of the policies of the past is likely to bring us only slow, fitful progress."

Paul's words, voiced in a policy paper on federal AIDS research priorities published in the journal "Science," reflect a growing view among scientists and even many clinicians that research on AIDS must return to basics — to a better understanding of the virus' molecular workings and the disease's etiology — before any real cures or vaccines can be promised or realized.

Paul suggests heavier investment in fundamental primate research, immune response, cell kinetics, the factors that cause immune collapse and behavioral research into why this preventable disease still spreads.

He also says the National Institutes of Health will welcome more unsolicited research proposals from scientists instead of trying to direct it all centrally.

These are all welcome ideas.

The only trouble is that Paul hopes that this back-to-basics approach can be achieved without any substantial cutbacks in efforts to find drugs and other treatments for those already infected with HIV or suffering from AIDS. (Just this week, for example, government researchers reported some success in using the protein interleukin-2 to increase white blood cells in infected people and thereby strengthen their immune systems.)

Paul wants to have his cake and eat it too. That will be a difficult political task in Washington's stringent fiscal environment.

This editorial appeared in Sunday's Los Angeles Times.

Last registration drive today

By Shawna Donovan
DE Governmental Affairs Editor

Braving the cold, damp weather, deputy registrars headed out to Greek Row Sunday afternoon to register about 100 or more students to vote. Today will be the final push for voter registration before the April 4 city election.

Susan Hall, a drive coordinator, said people can register at the Student Center Hall of Fame area from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. WIDB will have a live broadcast from the area.

Another registration table will be at the Corner Diner, 600 South Illinois Ave., from 5 p.m. to 10 or 11 p.m.

Rock WTAO will have a live broadcast from the diner.

Three student organizations, the Undergraduate Student Government, the Graduate and Professional Student Council and the SIUC chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, are helping with the registration drive.

"We have 67 deputy registrars between the three groups," Hall said.

Hall also said the Jackson County League of Women Voters has 22 deputy registrars. Some league members are helping with the drive at the Student Center.

Although an official number is not available, organizers said the registration has been low during the past four days.

During the January drive, more than 700 people were registered in seven days.

Matt Parsons, USG chief-of-staff, said deputy registrars went to several events last weekend.

"I know of people who went to a skating rink to register voters," Parsons said. "We will go back to the residence halls and Greek houses after we are finished at Greek Row."

"Not a tremendous amount of people have been registered," he said.

"This is our last big push," Parsons and others from USG and the community will hit the pavement Monday in a last effort to get students and citizens registered.

Parsons, a write-in mayoral candidate, said getting students registered helps the University and community.

"The more people registered, the better off students will be in any election," he said.

■ Laracsa Russell, 20, of Schneider Hall, told University Police $940 worth of jewelry was stolen from her room between 12 p.m. Feb. 26 and 10 a.m. Feb. 27.

■ John Hessian, 29, of Murphysboro, told University Police $220 was stolen from a locker at the Student Recreation Center between 5:30 p.m. and 8:20 p.m. March 2.

■ University Police said Erin K. Blacklock, 23, of Carbondale, reported a hit-and-run accident that happened in the 1000 block of South Illinois Ave. at 6:20 p.m. March 2. He said the driver of a mid-'80s pickup truck struck his vehicle and left the scene. There are no suspects in the case.

up or down," he said. "They shouldn't even think about that if they are wanting to invest long-term," he said. "Just set aside an amount of money every month."

"It has to be systematic," Melichar said. "That can be the hard part. Even $50 a month can be stretching most students' means."

Melichar said students rarely inquire about investments. Even recent graduates shy away from long-term investments.

"I've had two or three students come in to ask about investing in the time I've been a broker," he said. "All their concerns focus on paying off loans or buying a car."

Assistant Finance Professor James Musumeci said for most students it may not be realistically possible to consider investing.

"Most people in general don't invest," he said. "I didn't start until I was 35."

"For students, the problem becomes one of negative income," Musumeci said. "They are spending with money from loans, and making very little from whatever job they may have."

"They are borrowers, not investors," he said.

Susan Johnson, a sophomore in pre-nursing from Rockford, said long-term investing does not give her the freedom to access the money whenever she wants.

Melichar said for short-term saving, certificates of deposit would probably be better for students.

"Mutual funds are for the long term," he said. "They would not be worth it over the course of one or two years."

Past performance shows that a one- or two-year investment in a mutual fund could end in a loss, according to Melichar.

Johnson said she is not prepared to face that investment possibility. "I could lose all my money and there would be nothing I could do about it," she said.

Savings bonds, which cost as little as $25, can be a safe way for students who are afraid of the market to invest, Melichar said.

Kenneth Wake, a law student from Springfield, said students do not have an income which lends itself to investing.

"There is no way you can put 10 or 20 percent of your income away for investing," he said. "It would be nice, but it's not possible."

Chad Stafko, a junior in finance from Mulkeytown, said he does invest and it is a matter of making sacrifices.

"I try to say on a pretty tight budget," he said. "The reason I invest is because I don't want to be working up until the day I die."

Stafko, who said his investments range from savings bonds to mutual funds, said students can better afford to lose the use of money now rather than later when financial commitments are much deeper.

But even Stafko said it was his family who got him started in investing.

"When I was younger, my aunt and uncle would give me a savings bond instead of a Sega," he said. "I wouldn't be too thrilled about it at the time, but now I'm glad they did it."

form any recommendations, but merely discussed the issue.

"We will probably discuss it further," he said. "We want to get feedback from the administration and overall student opinion."

USG City Affairs Commissioner Mike Nolan said the group is designed to improve communication between students and the police and would not set any policies or come to any binding decisions.

Walsh said no agenda was set for the next meeting, but he expects some discussion on the items left off the agenda this time.

"The chief suggested we finish the things we didn't get done this time, such as mace," he said. "We are playing it by ear since we didn't do such a good job this time."

At its first meeting Feb. 3, the committee decided they would discuss four items at their March meeting: the use of force, including the use of mace; education issues associated with Carbondale's new nitrous oxide ban, methods of preventing burglary and the overall image of the police agencies.

The next meeting will be at 4 p.m. April 7 in the Student Center. It will be closed to the public.

Campaign

Campaign events ranged from a miniature-figure painting contest to an auction where people could sell their used gaming materials, according to Jane Forcier, a desk staffer and an alumna from Wadsworth.

"Well over $1,000 changed hands," she said.

Some of the games like "Napoleonic," "Advanced Dungeons and Dragons Miniatures," "Spanish Civil War" and "Warhammer 40,000" featured large sculpted playing boards complete with buildings and landscaping, dominated by miniature figures who fought imaginary battles.

In addition to the games, independent dealers and store owners rented space outside the ballrooms to sell their wares, according to Megan Janiszewski, a desk staffer and a senior in physiology from Wauconda.

Dr. Andy Ford, from Springfield, said he attended the campaign during the weekend because his wife was in town visiting her uncle.

Although he will not attend next year's campaign, he was impressed by the convention as a whole.

"There's a good bunch of gamers here in Carbondale and it's a really well-organized convention for a smaller town," Ford said. "The organizers have made it much easier for new players to start games."

"There's a good bunch of gamers here in Carbondale and it's a really well-organized convention for a smaller town."

Scot Keene of Carbondale was running a game called "Warhammer." Throughout the weekend he had been taking turns running the futuristic sci-fi version of "Warhammer," — called "40,000" — as well as the historical-fantasy version.

"It's a game of fantasy army battles," Keene said, describing the historical version.

The average player can learn to play "Warhammer" in about one to two hours, Keene said.

A box set with rules and a few miniatures costs $40-$50, Keene said, although "a good army would probably cost a minimum of $200."

Egyptian Campaign '95 was coordinated by Joel Nadler of Castle Perilous, 715 S. University Ave., and hosted by the SIU Strategic Games Society. It ran from Friday through Sunday in the Student Center Ballrooms.

5 state issues subject of rally

By Aaron Butler
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Citizen groups from all over Southern Illinois gathered Saturday in Carbondale to share ideas, hoping together they can better deal with some of what they perceive to be the area's critical social and political issues.

Frank Schnert, rally organizer and moderator, said the Southern Illinois People Network for Better Governance Rally would focus on sharing information and resources, and to inform citizens of what is happening in their government.

"We are not a political network," he said. "Our primary focus is education, to let everyone know what is going on throughout the state."

Senhert said the rally was for groups to get to know each other, and to find common ground.

"What issues are important to you as a citizen of Southern Illinois? This is your opportunity to be heard," he said.

The rally was divided into five discussion areas, where representatives of each group discussed their concerns on one of five major state issues: education reform, welfare reform, crime, job creation and property-tax relief.

Schnert said the five topics were identified as vital issues by Illinois Gov. Jim Edgar in his State of the State address.

Local control was the major priority for education; the groups agreed the federal government was playing too large a role in school administration.

Lack of accountability was seen as the biggest problem with welfare, the discussion revealed, with too much abuse of food stamps and other programs.

To create jobs, buying American products was suggested, along with raising tariffs on imports.

To reform property tax programs, the discussion group proposed reducing the tax on property improvements to encourage development.

Groups brought literature describing their concerns. During breaks everyone was able to mingle and ask questions to familiarize themselves with the other groups.

Many who attended the rally, including Patsy Campbell from Murphysboro, said they are disillusioned with the current government.

"I'm very tired of being ignored by my government, and that's why I'm here," Campbell said.

Charles Douglas, vice-president of United We Stand America/IL, reviewed the concerns after the group discussion. He said the problems facing the Illinois are not well known by most citizens because elected officials are unwilling to talk about them honestly.

"The state is broke and nobody wants to tell the truth about it," he said. "We are about 15-20 years away from a major social revolution, and unless we take responsibility now we're going to really suffer."

Echoing a concern expressed by those involved in the rally, Douglas urged private citizens to take an interest in the events occurring in their government.

"We've been letting things happen to us instead of guiding the way things happen," he said. "Everyone is busy, I know, but budget a little of your time to be concerned about your community."

The local chapter of the United We Stand America, a group affiliated with former-presidential candidate Ross Perot, hosted Saturday's rally. Other groups in attendance included Citizens Against Government Waste, the Christian Coalition of Sparta, Concerned Citizens of Waterloo, Citizens for An Alternative Tax System and the Concord Coalition.

would be nice to have that last shot back again because he's seen Trotter make it many times before.

"The difference down the stretch was simple. Their shots went in, ours didn't," he said. "We had a great look at the basket, but it (Trotter shot) didn't go in. I would like to go out there eight more times because it would probably go in every time."

"But after the way things went with us and Southern this year, I don't know how anxious they'd be to tee it up again."

SILUC staged a fierce comeback to sneak back into the game after trailing by as many as nine near the midway point of the second half. And just like the Drake victory Saturday, Lusk and Saluki forward Chris Carr earned the lead.

Carr finished with 20, while Lusk scored a career-high 22 as the Saluki tandem accounted for SILUC's final 17 points of the game.

Lusk and the Saluki surge was what led to the comeback. Of the problems, the team chipped away at it. Lusk slowly, rather than just going for the big shot.

"I don't know how we did it," Lusk said. "We just kept going. We knew we had a chance. We just kept going. We just kept going."

The Saluki victory was an 89-80 victory over SILUC in game one Sunday. Lusk had a 22-point outburst from game one. "Doubt" Williamson, 11 points, and sensation Shea Nantz scored first eight points as the Saluki forward was saddled with the lead in the first half and only saw 20 minutes of action.

"I don't think we're too concerned with the NCAA tournament right now. We really want to beat Tulsa," he said.

"We're just going to throw the ball on in the air tomorrow (Monday) and it's going to be a great first trip. I'm a regular season game, come down to last second shot."

Moss's title game tips-off at 7:30 a.m. will be nationally televised on ESPN.

OFFER GOOD AT CARBONDALE, TULSA, AND ANNA

Force has improved policies, response

By Stephanie Moletti
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The Presidential Mayoral Task Force on Sexual Assault was created in 1991 to determine how the University and city can work together more effectively in responding to the needs of sexual assault victims, according to the task force chair.

Beth Firestein, coordinator of Women's Services, is the University chair of the task force.

Firestein co-chairs the group with Laura Martin, coordinator of the Rape Action Committee at Carbondale's Women's Center.

The task force began meeting in 1992 to make recommendations to Carbondale Mayor Neil Dillard and SIUC President John Guyon on how to fill the "gaps in existing service delivery and improve our community's overall ability to respond to sexual assault," Firestein said.

Firestein said there has been substantial improvement made in policy and response.

Prevention best medicine

"Our hope is to help prevent (sexual assaults) by reducing risk factors, but because we can't stop all assaults we have directed the rest of our efforts to recovery," she said.

Twelve functioning areas were surveyed in "Current Policies and Response Pertaining to Sexual Assault at SIUC" and were outlined as the task force's goals.

Four of the areas were functioning adequately.

The remaining eight have been or are being addressing by the task force.

"The task force is a recommending body, but many of the recommendations have already been implemented," Firestein said.

Bringing people together

"One thing it has done is brought people together."

Firestein said members of local law enforcement agencies are on the task force and as a result there is increased cooperation among the agencies.

"It's a nice by-product," she said.

"Some of these people now have a better working relationship and are joining together on issues."

Don Mullison, a staff psychologist at the Counseling Center and a member of the task force, said the communication between the University and community has improved.

"There was a time when there were turf battles, who is responsible for what," he said. "I think the task force has minimized that."

Mullison said his only concern is the lack of student involvement with the task force.

"Students change and that can be a problem for us," Mullison said.

"We are interested and welcoming of student input and participation. They keep the rest of us sharper."

The group meets once a month throughout the academic year and tries to meet once in the summer. Firestein said she believes the task force will finish its work in the next one to two years.

campus, including more frequent inspection and replacement of lights along the Brightway Path; installation of emergency phones across campus; and additional vans to safety transit services for students with mobility-limiting disabilities.

An administrative policy statement was developed stating the campus and community's unwillingness to tolerate sexual assault and their intent to pursue procedures to ensure justice for victims.

The statement has been publicized in the brochure "What Men and Women Need to Know."

This brochure provides information on risk reduction and legal statutes of sexual assault, and also lists support services on and off campus.

"Our goal is to put one in the hands of every faculty, staff, student and member of the community," she said.

There are 30,000 brochures printed each year.

Don Mullison, a staff psychologist at the Counseling Center and a member of the task force, chaired the brochure committee.

The brochure is due to be revised in the upcoming year to update telephone numbers and incorporate new ideas, Mullison said.

He said the brochure is a part of the education effort.

An educational plan was developed for the campus and approved by SIUC President John Guyon. The plan guides and improves sexual assault education efforts by on and off campus agencies.

The Illinois Coalition Against Sexual Assault has been working with state police to install a standard protocol for responding to sexual assault survivors.

The Carbondale Police Department is currently working to implement the protocol.

Don Strom, Carbondale Police chief and a member of the task force, said the department had a protocol in place before, which almost paralleled the state's requirements.

The state's protocol outlines the department's initial response to sexual assault victims, ensuring counseling and support services for the victim. It also outlines how the department is to conduct the follow-up investigation, Strom said.

The Victims' Rights Subcommittee, within the task force, has worked with Student Judicial Affairs to clarify and develop written documents on victims' rights and how to pursue a grievance through the Judicial Affairs Office.

"This is to ensure that the judicial affairs process clearly communicates what their rights are and all the agencies are adhering to the highest standards," Firestein said.

She said she believes it is important for victims to have their rights specifically outlined.

"If they know that their rights are going to be protected, they will be more willing to report an assault," Firestein said.

Firestein said it is not to replace existing procedure, but rather to enhance and supplement it.

Mullison said judicial affairs gives victims another avenue for recourse.

"The University can proceed whether or not the State's Attorney does," he said. "There is a different standard of evidence, also."

According to the report, the group is working on developing a systematic way of collecting and sharing information on sexual assaults occurring on and off campus.

Firestein said if agencies share information, it may help in apprehending perpetrators.

The task force is also implementing the education plan and addressing the need for more frequent and systematic training of university personnel likely to come into contact with sexual assault victims.

"Three years is quite a bit of time, but we have actually done a lot," Firestein said. "It's really an exciting group to be a part of."

Theta Xi variety show offered spotlight for talented students

By Kristi Dehority
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Medieval kings and queens, dead rock stars, cowboys, O.J. Simpson and Woody Gimp, filled Shryock Auditorium Saturday night for the 48th edition of the annual Theta Xi variety show.

The Theta Xi All-Campus Variety Show began in 1947 and was designed to showcase students' amateur talents. This year's theme was "Chance of a Lifetime," and the groups performing carried the theme out in original acts.

Delta Zeta and Theta Xi won overall grand prize in the large-group category for their skit "Heavenly Chance." A bum musician dies and receives a second chance from heaven to return to life as his favorite rock star. He returns as Elvis Presley and does "Viva, Las Vegas."

First runner-up was Sigma Kappa and Alpha Tau Omega for their rendition of "My Kingdom." In it, a young prince dreams of the day when he will have his own kingdom and not be referred to as "Little Christopher," until the day his father is almost killed. The prince gets his chance of a lifetime when he saves his father's kingdom, wins the love of his princess and conquers a kingdom that he can call his own. Sigma Kappa and Alpha Tau Omega won individual awards for best costume, originality, choreography, group participation, use of theme and sets-and-lighting.

Alpha Gamma Delta and Pi Kappa Alpha received second runner-up by showing that love prevails over fame. "The Love That Would Last" portrayed a country boy that gave up his dream to go to New York to be a star, then return home to the woman he loved. Alpha Gamma Delta and Pi Kappa Alpha were also awarded the best music award.

MICHAEL J. DUSTIN — The Daily Egyptian

Members of the Alpha Gamma Delta sorority and Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity performed their act "The Love That Would Last" at Shryock Theater Saturday night. The performance was part of the Theta Xi All-Campus Variety Show, a tradition here since 1947.

Kappa Alpha, won first prize in the small/medium-group category for his performance of Frank Sinatra's "The Man and His Music." Redmond came on stage complete with tuxedo, and belted out the tunes in a way that would have even impressed ol' blue eyes.

Other memorable acts included the fraternities of Delta Sigma Phi, Sigma Nu and Phi Sigma Kappa, with a rendition of Forrest Gump — with a slight twist: Woody Gimp attended SIUC and played football with none other than O.J. Simpson.

Though most of the show centered on the variety acts, the Theta Xi show also recognized outstanding students with four awards and scholarships funded through event proceeds and donations. The Elmo Richard Heaton award was given to James P. Whitworth for outstanding excellence in the engineering and technology field. The Emil R. Spees Delta Chi Award was presented to student Gordon Geerdes for academic excellence and co-curricular activities.

Erica Grimm won the Kaplan Memorial Scholarship Award for her efforts in the biological science field, and Mortisha Rogers received the Service to Southern award, recognizing service to the University community service projects.

Archetypes

Art student's works represent Jung's psychological theories

By Benjamin Golshahr
Daily Egyptian Reporter

An SIUC art student has transformed one of psychologist Carl Jung's ideas into an entire exhibition by juxtaposing Jung's idea of archetypes with card playing.

An archetype is an original from which other things are patterned. John Siblik, an SIUC master's candidate in fine arts, uses woodcuts, oil paintings, etchings, photographs and sculptures made from cast iron, bronze and aluminum to illustrate different aspects of Jung's theory of four archetypes that exist in every individual.

Siblik said he tried for a long time to create a metaphor that could convey the archetypal concept. Then, while playing a game of pinochle with friends, he decided to use the interactions of four card players as the four archetypes (personified) in his work.

"It's a metaphor for the dynamic that occurs when a group of people play cards," he said. "It illustrates that dynamic is not dissimilar from the inner dynamic of the parts of the self which are present within every individual. It's my interpretation of how I see myself or a person or a group."

His "Four Enter, One Leaves: Archetypal Themes" exhibition will run March 5-18 at the Front Street Gallery, located at 100 S. Front Street in Cobden.

Siblik said Jung, who studied under Freud before developing his own psychological system, developed his theory by traveling the globe and examining different peoples' cultural beliefs. He found four ideas that all cultures seemed to share — the mother, spirit, trickster and reaper — and then applied them to his patients, Siblik said.

In one piece, titled "Can the Seer See Himself," Siblik uses four photographs of himself, each as a different archetype, and a card table as an attempt to convey how each of these archetypes are present in himself.

"I am every player at that card table," he said. "The table, with the photographs, is a way to see a concrete example of how I fit into this structure. The card game introduces notions of decision-making, chance, risk...all the factors that determine where and who you are in life."

The exhibit also features an oil painting, "The Card Players," which depicts the four archetypes as people playing cards at a table.

The other pieces in the exhibit are also related to the theme of archetypes, such as "Venus," a bronze sculpture of a naked heavy-set woman standing on seashells.

"The Venus figure fits into the mother archetype — the earth mother, the mother figure in yourself that nurtures you," he said.

Two of the exhibits are etchings that show Dante with the Roman poet Virgil, who acted as Dante's spiritual guide through Hell and Purgatory in "The Divine Comedy."

"As soon as you start looking at yourself in terms of the parts you're made up of, you begin to split the self," Siblik said.

"With Dante and Virgil you have a split self. Virgil represents the spiritual advisor to Dante, but we all have a part of ourselves that we seek advice from at times. Who do you talk to when you talk to yourself?"

Molly Johnson, a resident of Alto Pass, said she enjoyed the way Siblik uses different artistic mediums to convey a central idea.

She said she equally enjoyed trying to figure out what the central idea itself was through analyzing the different works.

"When I first looked at it I didn't piece it together," she said. "It gives you something to try and figure out. It elicits questions in my mind."

Siblik said he was born an artist, and this is his passion for his work that drove him to create every piece in this exhibit within one year. "I've been making art since I was five, so I've been doing it for 25 years now," he said. "This is what I do; there's nothing I'd rather do, so I do a lot of it."

Execs gather to discuss kids' TV

Los Angeles Times

PALO ALTO, Calif. — "It takes a whole village to raise a child and today that village is television," said Newton Minow, former chairman of the Federal Communications Commission.

Minow's comment was made before a gathering of about 100 television executives, children's rights advocates and academics who met at Stanford University Friday and Saturday to discuss the role of television in shaping children's values.

After two days of sometimes heated conference sessions, a conference committee recommended mobilizing greater parental involvement in children's viewing habits. In addition, it urged that those who create children's programming be encouraged to share their knowledge of child development and viewing habits with producers of prime-time shows that children watch most.

Funding university athletics

IBHE to decide the fate of state money for sports

IBHE to reconsider plan

By Dean Weaver
Special Assignment Reporter

The Illinois Board of Higher Education will meet tomorrow to determine if it should back down from its recommendation that all state universities stop funding athletics with state money.

This change in events may save students from paying significantly higher fees this fall.

An athletic fee increase was SIUC President John Guyon's proposal to comply with the IBHE's original recommendation. The deadline for compliance is June 30, 1996.

During the meeting, 17 IBHE members will listen to the problems college presidents are struggling with to comply with the athletic cuts.

Ironically, the IBHE proposal that is used as the justification for raising fees was originally intended to keep the cost of tuition and fees low.

"I'm not certain our board will stay with its original proposal," Hodel said.

"I think the board will make a decision by the end of the meeting."

IBHE recommendation

The IBHE recommendation was designed to focus limited state funds on academics, but colleges are struggling to find alternative athletic funding. The loss of funding also jeopardizes sports programs and scholarships given to athletes.

If SIUC administrators complied with IBHE's original request, the athletics department would lose one-third of its revenue, $1.3 million of $4.17 million.

President Guyon's plan

Guyon's solution is to propose a compromise that would cut state funding in half. A student athletic fee increase generating $650,000 would make up the difference, Guyon said.

SIUC students currently pay a $76 athletic fee per school year. Guyon would not comment on the specific amount of the athletic fee increase or if it would be phased in over a series of years. But Patrick Smith, president of Graduate and Professional Student Council, said he estimates the athletic fee to increase $30 for a total of $106 per year.

Student referendum

The students will have a chance to vote on the increase during a nonbinding student referendum conducted by Undergraduate Student Government and GPSC, Guyon said.

Smith said the referendum is tentatively set to coincide with USG elections April 10.

Guyon said he will present his recommendation to the SIU Board of Trustees April 11 with a vote expected in May.

"We (SIUC administrators) will modify the board matter depending on the outcome of the student referendum," Guyon said.

Guyon would not specify how

Division I: SIUC status in jeopardy

By Doug Durso
Daily Egyptian Reporter

When the Board of Trustees vote on the proposed athletic fee increase in May, the future of Saluki sports could be changed forever.

If the SIUC athletic fee is not passed, the SIUC athletic department could be forced to drop some athletic programs and lose its Division I standing.

A drop in divisions would mean that Saluki sports programs would no longer be a member of the Missouri Valley Conference, a reduction in scholarships available to athletics and a loss of some National Collegiate Athletic Association money.

Jim Hart, SIUC athletic director, said very few schools SIUC's size exist that are not NCAA Division I, which is the largest grouping of schools and where the most scholarships and money is distributed.

"President (John) Guyon organized a committee a couple of years ago to decide which level of competition we want to play at, and we decided that in two seconds — Division I," he said. "We will do everything in our power to keep this level, because this is

Universities struggle to comply with recommendation

By Dean Weaver
Special Assignment Reporter

While other public universities are either eliminating state funding of athletics or maintaining the status quo, SIUC President John Guyon is the first to consider a compromise.

The Illinois Board of Higher Education is recommending all public universities stop using state funds for their athletic programs by June 30, 1996 but plans to meet tomorrow to reconsider this proposal.

University of Illinois: The only school that meets IBHE's standard of athletics funding without raising student fees.

During the meeting, the 17 member board will listen to the problems the college presidents are struggling with to comply with the athletic cut.

None of the colleges in the state, with the exception of the University of Illinois, have been able to comply with the IBHE's request to eliminate the funding without raising student fees.

The IBHE wants to use the state money cut from athletics and reinvest it in undergraduate education, faculty salaries and technological advancements.

Guyon said he will propose that the University cut the amount of state funds used by athletics in half from $1.3 million to $650,000. Student fee increases would make up the difference.

Although raising student fees goes against the IBHE's recommendations, SIUC is not the only school struggling.

Northern Illinois University and Illinois State University are phasing out state funding of athletics, but both schools have the highest student athletic fees in the state.

Richard Greenspan, ISU director of athletics, said by July 1 his university will not use any state funds for athletics.

"We have been raising student fees and phasing out state funds over the past three or four years, but the students have not been asked to bear the entire burden of these cuts," Greenspan said.

ISU Athletics relies on $1.1 million from state funding but by fall 1995 student fees will contribute $750,000, he said. Greenspan said the athletic's department budget is still at $1.1 million because the department has increased revenue from marketing and fund raising while cutting costs.

Cary Groth, NIU athletic director, said to phase out state funding the student athletic fee has had to double.

"We're complying with IBHE, but the state should provide some support to athletics," she said.

The University of Illinois in Champaign-Urbana is the only public university that does not rely on state funding or student fees for athletics.

Tim Tracy, U of I business manager of athletics, said the university is in a different league than SIUC because it is a Big 10 school with high ticket sales and revenue coming in from radio and television.

He said that U of I is able to generate $5.4 million for football and $2.2 million for basketball through ticket sales alone. Radio and television rights add another $4.4 million in fiscal year 1994.

"I think it is simply impossible for an SIU or an ISU to get by without state funding," he said.

Western Illinois University receives about $900,000 in state funds for athletics and has no plans to comply with the IBHE's request.

Helen Smiley, WIU's athletic director, said she hopes the IBHE will listen to college presidents across the state and reconsider their position.

"We have a Division I program with 18 sports," she said. "If we lose state funds, we just couldn't run the program we're running."

Robert McBoe, Eastern Illinois University athletic director, said he will not comment on the IBHE recommendation because he is still hopeful it will be reversed.

Nancy Grant, EIU athletics business manager, said if the IBHE insisted that state funds not be used, the University would be in trouble. "It would take a fairly good size fee increase to compensate the loss," she said.

Guyon said he understands there are philosophical reasons for not funding athletics with state money, but the alternative is skyrocketing student fees.

Athletic Director Jim Hart said ticket sales, sponsorships and fund raising are being used to their limits. The department has not asked for a student fee increase in 11 years so it is operating at peak efficiency.

Status

where we want to be."

Associate Athletic Director Charlotte West said that after the last athletic fee increase 11 years ago the administration promised students it would take every measure against raising the fee again.

Therefore, West said the athletic department has been streamlined and is running as efficiently as possible, so the athletic fee is the only way to compensate for the loss of state funds.

In 1994 the SIUC athletic budget was $4.17 million, of which $1.3 million was state funded. The Illinois Board of Higher Education recommends the University cut out all state funding of athletics by June 30, 1996.

West said state funds were primarily used for salaries. The remaining athletic budget comes from student fees, ticket sales, NCAA and conference revenue distribution and self-generated funds, like advertising, sponsorship and fund-raising.

Guyon said he will seek a compromise of a $650,000 cut in state funding and an increase in the $76 athletic fee to make up the lost state funding.

Students will vote on the fee increase on April 10. The SIUC Board of Trustees will review the proposal on April 11 and vote on it in May.

Hart said raising student fees is the only solution, because there are no alternative sources to cover the loss.

Angenette Sumrall, a senior majoring in paralegal studies from East St. Louis, said that if SIUC drops its Division I status that would prove to be a disservice to the athletes.

Sumrall, a forward on the SIUC's women's basketball team, said athletics with the ability to play on a Division I team cannot if the University drops a level.

"If they do that I feel sorry for the other athletes who are Division I players and came here because it was a Division I school," she said.

Nikki Gilmore, a junior in communications, from St. Louis and Sumrall's teammate, said dropping down a division would not automatically cause her to leave school for another Division I program.

"It would be very disappointing not to be in a Division I program, but I like the school, the atmosphere, the coaching staff and the people here," she said.

Dropping down to Division II status would mean a reduction in scholarships and a drop to Division III would result in a loss of all scholarships.

Hart said he advocated decreasing the number of scholarships to 45 for Division I universities to alleviate a portion of the financial burden, but that was rejected.

Sumrall said scholarships are a big reason for coming to a school. "If I didn't get a full scholarship, I wouldn't have come here," Sumrall said.

Hart said in order for SIUC to maintain its Division I status 14 programs have to be kept.

Currently the school has 18 athletic programs and has cut wrestling, field hockey and men's and women's gymnastics since the last fee increase 11 years ago.

"It would be a travesty for a school this big not to have Division I athletic programs," Hart said.

"People perceive universities mostly by their athletic programs and SIUC would be damaged by any drop."

"We only take 1 percent of the Universities programs, but provide about 60 percent of the school's public relations."

Decision

he would modify the proposal before presenting to the Trustees.

"There will be a fee increase of significant magnitude to replace half of the current state funding," he said.

Guyon's proposal conflicts with the original IBHE proposal that advises schools not to raise student fees.

Hodel said Guyon's proposal does not pit SIUC at odds with IBHE because nothing concrete will be decided until March 7.

Guyon said diverting state funds from athletics to academics may sound good in theory but in practice is nearly impossible.

SIUC Athletic Director Jim Hart said implementing IBHE's proposal without cutting athletic programs would be tough.

Hart said losing a third of the athletic departments revenue would lead to cuts in the number of intercollegiate sports offered. This reduction could result in dropping from National Collegiate Athletic Association's Division I to Division II.

The division drop would mean a substantial loss in funds, scholarships and prestige, Hart said.

Hodel said the purpose of the plan is to have funds spent on academics instead of athletics.

The IBHE's athletic funding proposal is part of Priorities, Quality and Productivity (POP), a program initiated in 1991. The program was supposed to focus state money on high priorities including undergraduate education and faculty salaries.

SIUC has already eliminated 22 programs and reduced or consolidated another 33 programs as a result.

Kyle Perkins, associate vice president of academic affairs, said more than $6 million dollars of state money has been cut as a result of POP. The $6 million has been reinvested in salaries, undergraduate education, library support and technological advancements.

The IBHE does not have the power to cut University funds, but can make recommendations to the General Assembly that SIU's state support be reduced. For the current budget year, seven public universities received bonuses because of compliance with IBHE requests. SIUC did not receive the bonus, and one of the reasons given by IBHE was the failure of the University to have a plan for phasing out state support for athletics beginning fall 1994.

This is not the first time Guyon has attempted to seek student support for an athletic fee increase proposal. He is hoping students will be more supportive of this compromise proposal.

If the student support is there, and the SIUC Board of Trustees pass the increase, the University will still be in defiance of the IBHE's request not to raise student fees.

In a Nov. 9, 1994 report on POP, the IBHE stated that SIUC needs to reconsider raising student fees.

Charlotte West, SIUC associate athletic director, said the state funds used by the athletic department are less than one percent of the total funds SIUC receives from the state.

"I think less than 1 percent is a reasonable amount for the state to spend on supporting athletics," West said.

Panel explores legal, ethical questions on Net

By Jason E. Coyne
Daily Egyptian Reporter

As the pavement is being laid for construction of the information superhighway, many ethical and legal questions are being raised by users of computer networks.

An American Civil Liberties Union-sponsored discussion on the rights of privacy in the information age brought many of these problems to the forefront Thursday night in the SIU School of Law's Lesar Auditorium.

Forgery of E-mail messages, the interception of private information and other current ethical issues filled the discussion.

Greg Wade, a computer-systems administrator at SIUC, said people need to be educated thoroughly before they use a computer connected to a network in order to prevent others from accessing private information.

"People need to know how to use a computer connected to a network correctly before they get involved.

Many get involved before they know what they are doing and what the consequences are," Wade said.

Audience members were concerned with how authorities could distinguish between criminal action and innocent ignorance. An audience member said by hitting a wrong button he tapped into some child pornography. He said he was concerned about authorities being on the trail of the people distributing and receiving the pornography and lumping him in as a customer because of a mistake.

Robert Spellman, an assistant professor of journalism, said most of the information on computer networks is private and can be protected, but people make mistakes — like inadvertently revealing their password. But other information should be accessible to everyone at all times, Spellman added.

"All public records should be free and able to be accessed by all persons," Spellman said.

He said individual tax returns of millionaires, lists of deadbeat dads and E-mail of all federal, state and local officials should also be made available.

Law professor Bill Schroeder said it is unclear whether all types of information should be made available on computer networks because certain items could hamper individuals' progress.

"Arrest records for minor offenses should not be on networks, because once the information is in there it can not be removed by law," Schroeder said.

Wade said some companies have admitted to hiring computer hackers to break into rival companies' data to steal design plans for products. He said software known as "packet sniffers" is used to locate holes in computer-system security, but also can be used by hackers to break into computer networks.

"I would think at some point someone is going to be held responsible for information going out or coming in on the computer networks, either the users or the administrator," Wade said.

In addition to privacy problems, people are starting to voice their opinions on others through self-generated publications.

People are developing their own underground publications on the World Wide Web network knowing they have the readership, Wade said. These projects are undertaken by non-professionals with no regard for standards or ethics.

Wade said the computer networks could be equated with the "wild West," because there are no laws or authorities controlling what goes into or out of the networks.

Fans

Although the Salukis did not take the floor until 8:35 p.m., fans poured into the center to watch Illinois State's triumph over Southwest Missouri State and got the crowd going by tossing balloons and confetti with SIUC's Kiel version of the pound.

Shown throughout both games on the center's hanging video boards, painted-faced fans complete with Dawg ears showed their spirit by chanting and waving pom-poms and home-made signs.

At the tip-off, students raised their glasses of beer in true Saluki fashion to toast the team.

"It's like to Tiny Tim," Randy Schlessing, a senior in aviation from Omaha, Neb., said. "God Bless us, every one."

But the crowd was not all students.

Kenny Irvin, of Benton, said he has been attending SIUC games since 1960 and painting his bald head with white SIU letters for past MVC wins.

"I've painted my head the last three years for 'em," he said. "I hope to see them win again (the MVC championship) this year."

Sharon Roberts of Carverville sat proudly in a Saluki jersey and yelled constantly for the Dawgs.

"We (Roberts and her SIUC alumnus husband) got good seats and we'll be here as long as they keep winning," she said.

Along with the fans, the SIUC band, cheerleaders and Saluki Shakers kept the crowd cheering with traditional chants and a few original dances.

Mike Mandis, public relations coordinator of the home Saluki Dawg Pound, said he is planning on making the Dawg Pound a registered student organization next year.

Poulin trade pays big dividends for Hawks, Whalers and Rangers

By Jeff Jacobs
Hartford Courant

When Paul Holmgren, then Hartford Whalers general manager, traded Patrick Poulin to Chicago in a three-team, nine-player deal Nov. 2, 1993, he put it on the line.

"The risk is Patrick Poulin could go on to be the best left winger in hockey," said Holmgren, now Whalers coach.

In case you have forgotten, the Chicago Blackhawks traded Steve Larmer and Bryan Marchment to the Whalers for Poulin and Eric Weinrich. The Whalers turned around and dealt Larmer, Nick Kypreos, Barry Richter and a sixth-round draft pick (Yuri Litvinov) to the New York Rangers for Darren Turcotte and James Patrick.

According to the principals at this time: The key to the deal for the Rangers was Larmer. The key for the Whalers was Marchment (the next Ulf Samuelsson, remember?). And the key for the Blackhawks was Poulin.

Larmer and Kypreos went on to aid the Rangers to a Stanley Cup victory. Larmer is perhaps the most underrated wing in NHL history. Kypreos doesn't play much, but he has been photographed kissing the Cup everywhere from Yankee Stadium to MTV.

Marchment, lost to Edmonton in the Steven Rice free-agent arbitration, has since enraged most of the Western Conference with devastating bodycheck after devastating bodycheck. The list includes one that collapsed the lung of Toronto wing Mike Gartner on Feb. 3.

Poulin, 21, was lucky enough to escape Pierre McGuire's reign of terror, which surely would have fried his young brain as badly as it did poor Michael Nylander's.

But the truth is, Poulin did not play well after his arrival in Chicago. He finished with 12 goals and 25 points in 58 games with the Hawks and 14 goals in 67 games overall last season. After scoring 20 as a rookie, Poulin had set 30 as a goal.

"Patrick has played more consistently this year than last," Blackhawks coach Darryl Sutter said. "Last year, he would play one good game and four-five not very good ones. It was to where we were thinking he shouldn't even be in the lineup. To be perfectly honest, if we'd had had a deeper team, we might have sent him down."

This year is different, much different. Although they've played 14 of their first 20 games on the road, the Hawks are doing extremely well and Poulin by Saturday already had nine goals on a line with Jeremy Roenick and Tony Amonte.

Sutter admits Nicholls has helped him loosen his tie. His eyes aren't bulging as much. He's learning to smile. The NHL's No. 1 power play is clicking at nearly 27 percent and everybody seems to be having fun.

NCAA hoop stars finishing career becoming a rarity

By Michael Arace
Hartford Courant

Remember the days when a sensational sophomore was a promise for the future? Remember when you could look forward to watching that player develop over the next two seasons at Old Alma Mater U?

Times have changed. These days, when a talented sophomore comes along, the best anyone can do is hope he will stick around at least one more season before leaving for the NBA.

There is increased speculation that the top three players taken in the NBA draft this June will be North Carolina's Rasheed Wallace and Jerry Stackhouse and Maryland's Joe Smith. Not far behind could be Marcus Camby of the University of Massachusetts and Tim Duncan of Wake Forest.

All are sophomores.

Unless a rookie salary cap goes into effect before the draft, college basketball is almost certain to lose several of its brightest stars. The difference this year will be that the talent will be even younger. Instead of taking the best juniors, the NBA will be dipping into the sophomore pool. One of the reasons is that this season the senior class was weakened by the draft last year.

Does the name Donyell Marshall ring a bell?

All of these players have the talent to play in the NBA, but none are ready. They need more time to develop.

But young players with dollar signs flashing in front of their eyes can't be expected to see that. And agents are targeting younger players as prospective clients.

And who knows, some day there again might be a college All-American team of five seniors.

rhythm like that," Saluki head coach Dan Callahan said. "I was getting kind of greedy, I thought when he came up their with the bases loaded (in the fifth inning) he was going to hit one out."

SIUC's six-run lead was short lived as NIU immediately bounced back with four runs in the end of the first and sent starting pitcher Mike McConnell to the bench with one out in the second. (The Huskies were labeled the home team.)

"Mike just had a bad game," Callahan said of McConnell giving up six earned runs. "We know he's a good pitcher. He did really well in the fall and pre-season workouts. That's baseball."

After the Huskies pulled within 7-6 in the second inning, the Salukis put together a six run fourth to put themselves up 13-6.

SIUC's win over Ball State only took two hours and ten minutes and had good pitching from Mike Blang, who looked solid after off-season arm surgery placed a question mark on what his effectiveness would be this season.

Bears

ing the overtime period.

"I think we had more depth in the ballgame, we were at home and in a better condition," she said.

The victory gave SMSU 63 straight home conference wins.

Saluki head coach Cindy Scott said the team had confidence they could win at Hammons Stadium.

"The kids were really hungry," she said. "They thought we could come in here and win."

"This was the first time in five years we felt that way."

Cari Hassell led the Salukis with 21 points, including four buckets from three-point range. Heather Slater again gave the Salukis a boost off the bench pouring in 16, while Gilmore chipped in with 10.

Charize Longstreng paced SMSU with 24 points and LaTanya Davis added 10.

SIUC will either be a second or a third seed in the conference tournament, depending on the result of Drake's game against Illinois State, Sunday.

The women's MVC tournament starts Thursday.

well." Washington said.

"My hats off to Southern. I thought they played an excellent basketball game.

"We were nervous and psychologically, mentally, we just weren't focused. And we didn't play like we are capable of playing."

As back-to-back MVC tournament champions, the main question surrounding SIUC was whether or not it could defend its title in the brand new Kiel Center after two years at the old St. Louis Arena.

But after shooting 56 percent from the field as a team, Carr, Lusk and the rest of their teammates provided the answer.

"We just wanted to come out and establish ourselves, because we're the team to beat," Carr said.

"I think we sent that message out loud and clear to everyone.

"Three-fourths of mine (shots) were dunks. This is a great place to play ... shooting dunking, whatever it takes. I hope whatever Paul ate, he eats again (Sunday)."

Lusk's 10-of-14 showing came on the heels of two 20-plus games against Evansville and Creighton to end the regular season after struggling offensively the entire year.

A transfer from Iowa, Lusk had the family of former Hawkeye teammate and best friend Chris Street in the Kiel stands.

Street was killed in an automobile during Lusk's sophomore year.

"I was in Iowa when Paul was there for a short time and he has not had a great year," Washington said.

"Tonight he stepped up and did a great job. It's about time for him to play well."

Drake was led by sophomore sensation Lynnrick Rogers, who poured in 32 points, while Kevin Bennett and B.J. Windhorst chipped in 10 and 11, respectively.

With the victory, the Salukis advanced to the second round of the MVC Tournament to face intrastate rival, Illinois State, who had swept the season series with SIUC.

Illinois State got to the second round by defeating Southwest Missouri State 75-72 Saturday.

By Grant Deady

ST. LOUIS — Dog fight?
Not really.

SIUC continued its St. Louis surge Saturday night at the expense of the Drake Bulldogs as the Salukis tore off an 85-65 opening round win at the Missouri Valley Conference tournament.

An all-time MVC single-game tournament record 11,971 saw SIUC dominate Drake for nearly the entire 40 minutes after Saluki coach Rich Herrin had praised the Bulldogs as the second-best team in the tournament behind No. 1 seeded Tulsa.

"We had great respect for this team and what they accomplished at the end of the season, beating Tulsa at Tulsa," Herrin said. "It was a great victory for us because we had already beat Drake twice and we were very concerned coming into the ballgame about getting off to a good start."

SIUC set the pace early in the game by jumping out to a 7-0 lead before Drake came back to

But when Saluki freshman guard Shane Hawkins buried a jumper at the 14:10 mark of the first half to put SIUC up 11-9, the Bulldogs were never allowed back into the kennel.

SIUC held a double-digit lead for the entire second half, pushing its advantage as high as 26 at one point.

Drake coach Rudy Washington made no excuses for his team after the game and delivered some praise to SIUC players Paul Lusk (25) and Chris Carr (26) for coming through in such a crucial game.

Bears outlast Salukis, 74-67

By Doug Durso
Daily Egyptian Reporter

The SIUC women's basketball team's improbable Missouri Valley Conference title run came up one game short Saturday as Southwest Missouri State beat the Saluki women 74-67 in overtime.

The first half was controlled by the Salukis, who shot 55 percent and took a 36-23 lead into the locker room.

However, in front of 8,489 screaming Lady Bears fans, SMSU stormed back to take in the game into overtime.

At the midway point of the conference season, SIUC was in fifth place, but rattled off eight-straight wins to be in a position to challenge for the regular season championship.

The loss puts the Saluki women in second place at 13-5 and drops their overall record to 18-8. SMSU is guaranteed the No. 1 seed in the MVC tournament with a 14-4 conference mark and an 18-10 record on the season.

Foul trouble for three SIUC starters, including standout guard Nikki Gilmore, allowed the Lady Bears to come back and outlast the Salukis.

Jefferson, who was named MVC Player-of-the-Week, went out with in the first two minutes of the second half with four fouls and she fouled out with 8:43 remaining in the game.

After disputing a traveling violation, Gilmore picked up a technical foul, which was also her fifth personal foul, disqualifying her with 6:10 in the second half.

With Jefferson and Gilmore out of the game, the Lady Bears went on an 11-3 run to tie the game at 55 with 5:43 remaining.

In overtime the shorthanded Salukis could manage only one point, on a free throw.

Lady Bears head coach Cheryl Burnett said depth was the key dur-

SIUC baseball returns home, wins two straight

By David Vingren
Daily Egyptian Reporter

Only the darkness could stop this one from carrying on forever.

The Salukis scored two home victories this weekend, a 4-1 win over Ball State on Saturday and a long, cold, and dark 8-inning 13-9 win against Northern Illinois on Sunday.

Both teams in Sunday's contest combined for 22 runs, 23 hits, and a woeful nine errors, five by SIUC. After nearly two hours and 45 minutes of play, the game was finally called by umpires on the count of darkness after eight innings.

The Salukis jumped on the board early in a big way, pounding out six runs on five hits in the first inning and sending Husky pitcher Dave Markusic to the dugout after he hurled only one-third of an inning.

The rally was keyed by SIUC first baseman Pete Schlosser's home run blast to left field, his first hit of the season after sitting in an 0 for 10 slump prior to the game.

Schlosser may have been looking to make up for his slump in one game as he popped another shot out of the yard in his next at bat in the second inning. The senior finished the day, 2 for 4 with 2 home runs and 4 runs batted in.
